

A Puzzle to the Past (Almost No Major Glitches, Go Nuts With S+Q)

All important information is in blue and bold but I suggest you read the whole thing first. Maybe there are clues.

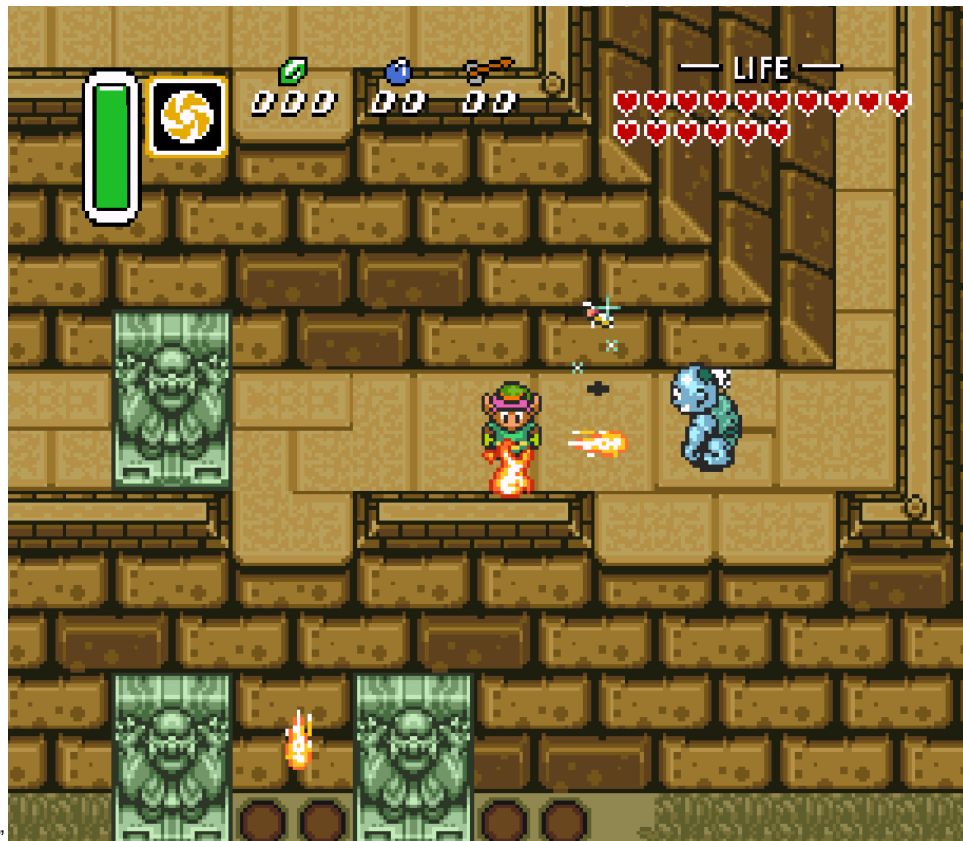

It was a grey, rainy day when Link awoke to find his uncle trying to sneak out of their house. He realised that his sword and shield were being stolen but he figured the fool could use all the help he could get. "Why do you always break into my house and sleep in my bed?" his uncle muttered in despair. Sadly, Link's uncle was losing control of his mind. He rarely knew where he was these days. He wasn't much better when he was younger though. After all, he didn't have the foresight to build a house with more than one bed. Link hated top and tailing. Why couldn't they have a kitchen? Or even a toilet? Link hated his uncle.

His uncle was confused and hated this stranger more though. "I'm going to find the King and report you. Trespassing is punishable by death, you know!" exclaimed his uncle, before marching out into the rain. After much internal debate and concluding that this was all a load of irrelevant narrative codswallop, Link forced himself out of bed and after his crazy uncle.

What Link couldn't know however was that his uncle forgot the way to the castle and tragically fell down a hole in the castle gardens. The fall was near-fatal and left his uncle scarred; a bruised knee. He could hear swordless guardsman in an adjacent corridor. He was surely doomed. He decided to accept his fate. An empty corridor is rather strong, after all. His only regret in life was allowing this stranger to break into his house. He was livid. He would do anything to seek revenge. He wished a big blue pig wielding a trident would appear and curse this fiend. And would you believe it?

Out of nowhere, a disfigured farmer who had clearly suffered a cloning accident with a pig materialised out of the sewage water. Before a moment could pass it roared "Surrender your soul, fine warrior, and I shall place curses on this trespasser of yours". Link's uncle could feel death coming for him. Without even finding out what these curses were, "take my soul" he gasped. And then he died. Or pretended to die whilst Link saved Hyrule, then mysteriously recovered. Convenient.

Before Link could get to his uncle, he was ambushed by a wizard. A wizard who had an unconventional affection for blue balls. "Oh hello Link. Today will be the day that you .forfeit. I have foreseen it, as I have cursed thee. Oh how I have cursed thee. There is only one way to save yourself now. You must replicate the below screenshot. Only then can you .done.

All of a sudden, the evil wizard drew (a) Link to the Past. Back to a scary, dire time: 2012. A time where local knowledge was poor beyond belief. Few people could key dash or avoid stair lag let alone save Hyrule in under 90 minutes.

It was a time when EG, semi-EG and screen scrolling were too advanced to use. A time where nobody knew what a Yuzuhara was. A time where hovering was only possible in a TAS. A time where wall-clipping was limited to DMD and Fluteless-Mire. Any other glitches, if you know of any, are allowed (and maybe required - who knows).

"As you are cursed dear boy you shall at all times adhere to the following rule or else suffer a .dq, you pathetic fool"

The combined total of your hearts and pendants must at all times be greater than the total number of items and equipment in your inventory screen. Any upgraded items/equipment also require an additional heart or pendant whilst in your inventory screen. Seeing as you are already wearing a despicable Green Mail this is exempt.

Upgraded Items

Remember that bombs appear in your inventory. You must have sufficient hearts/pendants to carry them and use them (including bomb jumps). However if you collect one by accident and it takes you over your heart/pendant limit then just discard it and carry on.

"Child's play" Link retorted, smugly. "I can just kill Armos, go to Desert Palace, navigate my way to..." "Silence!" shouted the wizard. Outraged by his arrogance, he responded "you think that's easy, do you? Well then. I better place my 5 top tier curses on you. Let's see you speedrun your way to victory now, scrub"

- The Moon Pearl is protected with the power of a crystal switch. In order to break the almighty protective barrier you must first hit a crystal switch located outside of a dungeon with the Cane of Somaria.

- You may never have both a sword and the Fire Rod at the same time. Oh, what a conundrum!

- All rocks that are located in the Light World Desert cannot be moved. Ever. I guess you don't even lift, bro.

- You want to push or pull as many statues as you like? Nice joke. You may only move one statue. Ever.

- These little babies can never be used on the overworld. You're not bomberman you maniac.

"How do you like those apples (bapples)!" the beast jested.

"Sigh. You think you can place restrictions on me and try to pass it off as a 'puzzle' you cheating mother fu...." screamed Link in what can only be described as a combination of frustration and disappointment at the acceptance of his coming failure. However, before Link could finish his sentence, a puff of smoke appeared and the wizard vanished from sight.

For a second, Link thought he saw a surfing (Easter) bunny in the nearby shallow waters. Before he could be sure the rabbit appeared to have died. Strange. Link felt sorry for the rabbit. If only I could resurrect the dead, thought Link.

Link snapped back to his senses. He was alone again. Alone in the rain. He could see his uncle's footprints leading to a single bush. I had better get on with it, thought Link.

And so it began.